

I have been enjoying the privacy rights in Indiana regarding unwanted phone calls in my home for almost a year.

Prior to the law prohibiting unwanted solicitation, I received at least three calls per evening, perhaps even more than 15 per week.

Calls were also coming in on Saturday Mornings. I had gotten to the point that I refused to answer my phone, and would only return calls to family if they left a voice mail.

I live in Indiana. I vote in Indiana. I voted for legislation that would give me the privacy and peaceful home life that I relish.

It is REDICULOUS that the FCC even considers modifying the existing laws in Indiana, or implement any proposals, policies, or laws that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections.

You clearly are considering legislation that is pushed by business lobbying efforts.

The FCC is an agency that governs practices. Stick to managing the business. Don't try to manage the CONTENT of a phone call. Manage the actual service being provided by phone companies.

Civilians are prevented (by state statute) from making harassing communications in Indiana over the phone. Why would you consider making businesses exempt?

I believe that having the FCC legislate what communications I allow in my home is a violation of due process.

I am free - in the pursuit of life, liberty and happiness.

Having a phone makes my life simple.

Having it sit quietly in the evening makes me happy.

Having you change MY law squashes my liberties.
